Executive Summary

The bot demonstrated marginal profitability with a 41.4% win rate and a net loss of $-1.1525 across 58 trades. While the scoring system correctly identified two profitable trades (SUI-USDT, WIF-USDT), systemic issues in regime identification, liquidity handling, and order rejection rates (95%+ of trades) crippled performance. Regime misclassification (e.g., ARB-USDT, TIA-USDT) and incorrect coin-specific regimes (e.g., INJ-USDT) led to excessive rejections, while the 'SPI_COLLAPSE' tag suggests unhandled market conditions. The bot's structure requires urgent refinement to address regime sensitivity and liquidity constraints.

Top Issues

- Regime misidentification causing 95%+ trade rejections (e.g., ARB-USDT, TIA-USDT, INJ-USDT)
- Liquidity constraints and unhandled market conditions (e.g., 'SPI_COLLAPSE' tag)
- Poor win rate (41.4%) despite correct scoring for executed trades, indicating flawed entry/exit logic

Recommended Fixes

- Implement dynamic regime detection with coin-specific volatility thresholds and adaptive scoring weights to reduce misclassification errors
- Integrate real-time liquidity depth analysis and slippage modeling to prevent failed order placements and unhandled market conditions

3. Revise exit logic to include trailing stops, profit targets, and regime-aware dynamic exits to improve win rate beyond 50%

Quant Analysis

The composite scores for the trades indicate that the scoring system was somewhat effective, as the two trades that were executed (SUI-USDT and WIF-USDT) both resulted in profits. However, the overall win rate of 41.4% and the negative PnL suggest that many high-scoring trades did not perform well. The trades executed were not the highest-ranked coins (JUP-USDT and OP-USDT had higher composite scores), indicating a ranking mistake. Additionally, the low average win compared to the average loss suggests that the scoring system may not be accurately predicting profitable trades. No threshold mis

Liquidity Analysis

The vast majority of trades were rejected, indicating significant issues with order placement or market conditions not meeting the bot's criteria. For the few executed trades, the 'SPI_COLLAPSE' tag on exits for SUI-USDT and WIF-USDT strongly suggests that the bot encountered a sudden decrease in market depth or an increase in spread at the time of exit. While these specific trades were profitable, the 'SPI_COLLAPSE' indicates that the available liquidity for the position size was not adequate, leading to potential slippage or difficulty in executing at the desired price. This could have been

Regime Analysis

The bot exhibited significant regime misidentification, particularly with ARB-USDT and TIA-USDT, leading to excessive rejections. Coin-specific regimes were often incorrect, especially for INJ-USDT, which was repeatedly rejected despite potential opportunities. Regime changes caused unexpected losses, as evidenced by the negative PnL and low win rate. False negatives were prevalent, with many good opportunities skipped due to incorrect regime identification.
